The Honorable Donald J. Trump
President of the United States of America
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Washington DC 20500

The Honorable John Thune
Majority Leader
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20515

The Honorable Mike Johnson
Speaker of the House
US House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear President Trump, Leader Thune, and Speaker Johnson,

By cutting federal clean energy incentives, the Republican budget reconciliation bill would interfere with K-12 school funding across the United States. Clean energy projects can reduce monthly energy costs, allowing schools to spend more on supporting students, faculty, and staff. With its draconian cuts to solar energy incentives, the Republican reconciliation bill promises to stall ongoing state and school district solar projects, disrupt their investments, and eliminate an essential cost-saving tool. We urge you to reconsider cuts to clean energy incentives that provide cost saving benefits to schools.

Since 2023, at least 400 solar projects at schools have or are positioned to utilize federal clean energy incentives, including the technology-neutral clean electricity investment credit.¹ Schools can use the clean electricity investment credit through elective pay and third-party leasing arrangements.² Elective pay allows tax-exempt entities that directly own a clean energy project, such as public schools and school districts, to receive tax credits as cash. Third-party arrangements allow schools without the upfront capital to partner with developers that own and maintain the solar systems so schools can enjoy the benefits of solar energy and lower energy bills with little initial out-of-pocket expense.

² Attached spreadsheet identifying K-12 solar projects that either have started construction or are in the planning stages and at risk with the proposed solar cuts in the Republican reconciliation bill.

Among those eligible for the federal clean energy incentives is the Wayne County Schools in West Virginia. It is launching the largest solar demonstration in Appalachia, which will allow the county to maintain services despite anticipated state budget cuts.³ By reducing energy costs through solar energy infrastructure, the school district will save a projected $6.5 million over 25 years, enough to fund three full-time teachers throughout their careers. As of June 2025, 12 of the 17 installations are still underway.⁴

More school districts are planning solar projects that will help lower energy costs and prevent state budget cuts from impacting students, educators, and staff. But the proposed cuts in the Republican reconciliation bill threaten the delay, disruption, or cancellation of solar deployments. There are at least 251 school solar projects in 26 states in various stages of planning and construction.⁵ Projects that are not able to commence construction before proposed repeals take effect risk delay, wasted local and state investments in project development, higher energy costs, and increased burden on taxpayers. Among the identified projects are 74 school solar installations in Pennsylvania, 53 in Arizona, 15 in Texas, 12 in Kentucky, 5 in Utah, 4 in Iowa and Wisconsin, 2 in Indiana, and 1 in Idaho, Florida, Kansas, North Carolina and West Virginia.

Additionally, the proposed cuts will disrupt and potentially waste state investments. States are using their own funding, combined with federal tax incentives, to support school and school district energy infrastructure investments. Pennsylvania, for example, is investing more than $22.6 million in more than 70 schools to use solar energy to save schools thousands of dollars per year in energy costs.⁶ A recipient of the program, Tunkhannock Area School District, received $1 million in state funding, which, when combined with federal clean energy tax credits, will support construction of solar panels at five schools through a partnership with a Pennsylvania solar company, GreenWorks Development. The panels are expected to generate most of the district's electricity needs and ultimately save local taxpayers upwards of $800,000 annually.⁷ State investments such as these are at risk because they are intended to be supplemented by federal support, which the Republican budget reconciliation bill would eliminate.

Local communities are counting on federal clean energy tax incentives to allow them to invest in school-based clean energy infrastructure that will lower energy and operating costs. Schools and communities should not lose access to these critical funds.

IDENTIFIED K-12 SCHOOL SOLAR PROJECTS PER STATE

This is a partial list of solar projects at schools in various stages of planning and construction. Projects that are not able to commence construction before proposed repeals take effect risk delay, wasted local and state investments in project development, higher energy costs, and increased burden on taxpayers. This data likely underrepresents the total number of solar projects under development at schools throughout the nation and the negative impacts of the proposed repeal of the energy tax credit.
